WESTON MANOR

Weston Plantation

"...a very pretty, large white house situated on a hill that sloped to the river, with pretty fruit and shade trees scattered over the lawn." - Emma Wood Richardson

Weston Manor provided a safe haven for young Emma Wood and her family during the Civil War. Years later, Emma recalled the hardships her family endured during the war, ranging from the lack of food, clothing and medicine to the inflated prices of what little was available. Most of all she remembered the "great anxiety" she felt when the Union army arrived at City Point, nearly two miles east of here, on May 5, 1864. Wood's fears were unfounded; not only did the Federal troops provide safe passage to their lines, but also "the first real coffee and the first square meal" the family had tasted in six months. Once the Union army occupied this area, it quickly established a pontoon bridge across the Appomattox River at Broadway Landing, approximately 1.5 miles west of here. Men and matériel used this crossing throughout the Petersburg campaign. Supplies arrived at Broadway Landing via Cedar Level Station on the United States Military Railroad.

This "historic" portion of the Appomattox River's course first laid out by a water plantation in the 1700s. By 1800 only 100 acres more still remained in 1900. Subsequent private sales have with scattered but dense vegetation on the entire site.

Established around 1860 as the entry point for Frank Magness, the settlement at Broadway Landing formed which between the Virginia's primary river. Abandoned after the period of the railroad in the late 1800s, the landing now is the ruins as the result despite the the Army of the James, abandoned across the Appomattox River at Broadway Landing.
